Celebrated designer Richard Frinier shares his strong respect and appreciation for the importance architecture plays in society with a new collection of Sunbrella® fabrics. The Architexture Collection echoes architectural design elements found in surface and façade design. “I became inspired by the growing architectural movement taking place that involves the surfacing and resurfacing of buildings around the world,” Frinier said. “Captivated by the many unique layers and materials, such as metals, glass, concrete and other new and repurposed materials, used to create these remarkable architectural facades, I created blueprints of photographs of buildings and then translated them into textiles. The outcome is compelling for their overall design, construct and spatial effects and the impact and influence these buildings have on society.” Architectural impressions continued to manifest throughout Frinier’s design process and the result is a versatile range of textiles with distinctive constructions, textures, patterns and colors. Fabrics in the Architexture Collection enhance and complement both interior and exterior spaces.
